Travels of Ego and Alter. THE LURAY CAVE-DEPARTURE FROM PAU-QUIER-FRONT ROTAL-UP THE SOUTH PORK-A PAIRT LAND IN STONE-THREE TIMES IN A DAY -- AN INDIAN TALE -- WE MEET OLD FRIENDS UNDERGROUND. [Correspondence of the Richmond Dispatch.]

LURAY, August 29, 1879. We lingered in Fauquier somewhat longer than we had anticipated on account of continued rains; and, although it is not pleasant to have one's plans interrupted, no pleasanter place to be detained than Fauquier could well be found. We worked our neighborhood, spending a night very de-lightfully at "The Crar," the former home of General Turner Ashby, and the present home of Dr. Jacquelin Marshall. Immedi-Ashby was born and spent his early life. press Column, of the most graceful shape of most of us when we got in: 'Faith, Though the place has gone down very and most spotless whiteness, until the magnitude of most of us when we got in: 'Faith, Though the place has gone down very and most spotless whiteness, until the magnitude of most of us when we got in: 'Faith, Though the place has gone down very and most spotless whiteness, until the magnitude of the server for Front Royal via Manassas Gap. The our return we go into Skeleton Gulch, Gap is almost a defile, as one would scarcely mountain. Linden is just on the summit rock. The rock is still forming around of the road, and here the waters flowing them, but it probably took several hundred Scores have told it before me, and every man into the Shenandoah are divided from those emptying into the Potomac. I got off this impromptu for Alter's benefit:

On Landen, when the sun was high.
All cloudless stretched the azure sky,
and bright as summer was the eye
Of each tramp walking rapidly.

I must remark here that the parody on Excelsior in my last letter was not original, but the quotation marks were inadvertently omitted.

I must leave the reader to imagine how we walked along, following Happy Creek, though part of the road lay through Dismai Hollow (an allegory in that), until we came taken, as shown by the great number of new buildings growing up. We had a few moments chat with friend Lovell, of the Sentinel, to whom we are indebted for courtestes. The next day we set out for Luray, following the South Fork of the Shenandoah. On our left was the Blue Ridge, with its swellthe same emotions that would be produced by one of Hayden's grand organ symphonies, while the Massanutten on the right, with its ragged, jagged, cragged outline, and the suggestion of the yawning chasms within, stirred the soul like the rugged majesty of one of Bach's concertos. And anon the view of a lovely valley, with a limpid stream meandering to her wigwam, and still she watches and through it, would soothe the spirit like the gently-flowing melody of Mendelssohn's Spring Song. With these accompaniments we trudged over the twenty-five miles be- perhaps her only one. tween Front Royal and Luray, arriving by moonlight just as Jupiter rose above the Blue Ridge and Venus set behind the Massanutten. We put up at the Rust House, and after a delightful supper we lay down to sleep the sleep of the tramp and dream of the wonderful cave. Mr. Rust is one of the most attentive proprietors we ever met. and we would recommend him to all visit-And the cave, itself-what shall I say of it? No pen can describe it-no pencil deplet it. But this I will say, by way of prelude: I have been in the Mammoth Cave, and do not besitate to assert, without qualification, the immeasurable superiority of this. There you walk over a much greater space under ground, but it is nearly all bare rock, while here no rock is seen. For each a form of beauty takes which at once delights and bewilders the eye, and spreads ray. heartily endorse the statement of a northern professor, that all the stalactic formations in the Mammoth Cave were surpassed in quantity and beauty in the Grand Entrance alone of the Luray cavern.

We made good use of our opportunities, going in twice in the morning (once with two very green young countrymen and their sweethearts) and once at night, when the cave was illuminated in honor of General Beauregard and a large party that came over with him from Rawley Springs. In this party we were glad to meet some pleasant acquaintances from Richmond. The entrance to the cave is down a long flight of steps into a large chamber, called the Grand Entrance, in the centre of which is Washington's Column. This column reaches within a few feet of the ceiling, and is thirty feet thick in one direction and fifteen in the other. It is draped, like the walls of the room, with long pendants resembling icicles. From a long stalactite near the cen-tre of the room bung a chandelier, which was brilliantly lighted at night, making the first impressions of the cave very favorable.

Passing by a formation which strongly resembles the pre-Adamite Glyptodon, we come to the Flower-Garden. No one who you would fain adorn your button-hole. Just beyond this the cave widens into a beautiful amphitheatre, where one can amuse himself by fancying all manner of shapes in the fantastic ornamentation of the walls. But that is true of the whole cave. Passing over Muddy lake by a bridge, we enter a narrow passage which leads under a beautiful natural bridge to the Fish Market. Nothing more natural than these fish can be imagined. Several different varieties can be recognized. Some are cleaned and laid open, some have their bodies curved as if almost snowy in their whiteness. "One of the old Thirteenth." the old Thirteenth." "What!" I exclaimed; "one of the reginary shad, but all as some one remarked, are the morning's party remarked, "Them fish is as noice as ever I see." From here we go through Elfin Ramble to the edge of Pluto's Chasm-a mighty, yawning abyss five hundred feet long and seventy-five feet deep, with the Spectre Column rising pure and white in the distance. Retracing our steps somewhat, we come to the Crystal Spring. Picture to yourself a basin two or three feet in diameter, with a scolloped border of the most delicate pattern curving in over the water, inlaid with tiny white crystals. That is the Crystal Spring. After taking a drink of the pure water we pass along a passage which gives us a view of Pluto's Chasm from one extremity, and right by us we have Proserpine's Column, pure and white as the Spectre Column, which we again see in the distance. Passing on by Oberon's Grotto we see Titunia's Veil falling snow white over the yellow formations. And clear as spermaceti, and in the midst of all this lies the Fallen Column, shaken from the wall in an earthquake that must have occurred several thousand years ago, for the stalactics have formed upon it in its present position several feet thick. The column ites like a fallen monarch, for it is of immense length and twelve feet in diameter. After turning aside to see the curious and beautiful Bath-Room, we passed under the both sides from the hills, so that when we both sides from the hills, so that when we both sides from the hills, so that when we both sides from the hills, so that when we both sides from the hills, so that when we both sides from the hills, so that when we both sides from the hills, so that when we were exposed to a cross-fire. After a few seconds we rewing pours its blessing on all who enter this holy place. No such cathedral as this was ever fashioned by man; such a wealth of soulpture no human architect ever laying some one building. Worked out in the said 'some one had blundered.'

He sits down in dumb despair, until, thinking anything better than that, he starts up once more, gropes his way wildly around, his foot slips, and with one wild cry of despair he falls over the precipice, at the foot of which he lies. My Queen. Where and how shall I earliest meet her?
What are the words she first will say?
By what name shall I learn to greet her?
I know not now, but 'twill come some day.
With the sunlight streaming down upon her—Gleaming down on her ringlets' sheen—She is standing somewhere—she I would honor—She whom I wait for—my queen, my queen!

I will not dream of her tall and stately;
She that I love may be fairy light;
I will not say she shall walk sedately;
Whatever she does will sure be right.
She may be humble or prond, my lady,
Or that sweet calm which is just between;
But, whenever she comes, she'll find me ready To do her homage-my queen, my queen !

But she must be courteous, she must be holy— Pure in her spirit—this maid I love: But whether her birth be noble or lowly, I care no more than the spirits above: And I'll give my heart to my lady's keeping. And ever her strength on mine shall lean; The stars shall fall, and the angels be weeping. Ere I cease to love her—my queen, my queen I LOUISA COUNTY, August 30, 1879.
